

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

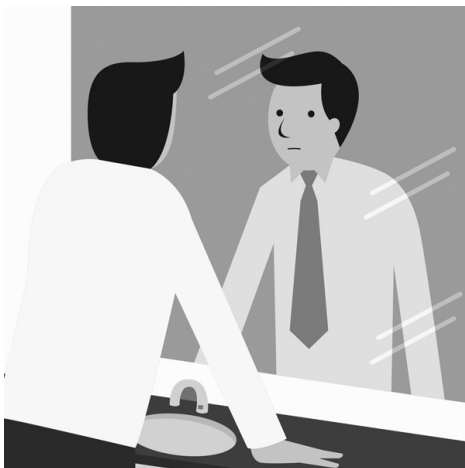

CONTENT

- Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Let's take a look at body language!

Learning Outcome

Analyze issues relating to different topics and their solution in written and spoken situations according to work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Do you think you can find out things about people by reading their body language? Why or why not?
- What are some ways you can express your emotions and/or feelings using your body?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about reactions and behavior in different situations related to work topics.
- I can request or report facts about events or actions.
- I can exchange complex professional information related to work and job issues.

Let's Explore!

What about facial expressions?

* "Facial expressions" refer to the gestures you make with the muscles in your face.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

When you are making a presentation, you need to observe your audience. This is to help you gauge their level of interest. If you have an idea of what gets their attention, you will not only be able to get a good idea of how engaging your content is, but you will also connect better with them. Intuitively, people pick up on the small movements and gestures known as body language in which case, you need to be aware of the following:

Facial Expressions

These are fairly self-explanatory. You might not always have a clear view of the audience's faces, but facial expressions can be extremely useful to determine audience reactions.

Leaning Forward

Leaning forward toward the person who is presenting is often subconscious. It is a typical indicator of interest whereas leaning back may indicate that someone is bored.

Crossing of Arms

Most people think that this is a defensive signal which likely indicates a difference of opinion. It could be that an audience member is reacting in this way because they find the subject sensitive or that they are not satisfied with something that has been said. It is worth your while to note that an audience member who exhibits this body language may not be giving off either of these subconscious signals. If someone sits with arms crossed for the duration of the presentation, it doesn't necessarily mean they are upset or angry by what you are saying. It might be that sitting in this way, they are in their comfort mode. Similarly, if a person keeps shifting around in their chair because they want to get comfortable, it might not mean they are bored or restless.

If you have the chance to observe the behavior of the whole group rather than each individual, you will get a more precise idea of the general audience response to your presentation.

Let's Practice!

Adam reads about non-verbal communication.

Instructions: Match the sentences in Column A to the sentences in Column B.

COLUMN A

1. If you want to judge the reactions of audience members
2. If someone sits with arms crossed for the duration of the presentation
3. If you have the chance to observe the behavior of the whole group
4. When you are making a presentation
5. If a person keeps shifting around in their chair

COLUMN B

- a. it doesn't necessarily mean they are upset or angry.
- b. by what you are saying.
- c. it might not mean they are bored or restless.
- d. you will get a more precise idea of the general audience response to your presentation.
- e. look at their faces which will show whether or not they are paying attention.
- f. you need to observe your audience.

Let's Practice!

Adam reads about the importance of connecting with your audience through body language.

Instructions: Use the words from the Word Bank to correctly complete the sentence. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

Word Bank

to gauge / intuitively / defensive / subconscious / reactions / consciously / distinguish / indicator

1. Observing your audience can be an extremely useful way _____ interest levels during your presentation.
2. A lot of the signals given off by body language are picked up _____.
3. Facial expressions can be extremely useful to determine audience _____.
4. He made a _____ move to lean forwards towards the presenter.
5. A subconscious move to lean forwards towards the presenter is a classic _____ of interest.
6. Crossing the arms can be a _____ signal, or it can indicate disagreement.

Extension Activity

Role-play a situation in which two colleagues are talking and using body language.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- With a partner, review the different forms of body language from this lesson.
- Go online to read about other forms of body language.
- Discuss a situation in which two colleagues are discussing something important at work. The colleagues have different points of view about the topic.
- Prepare a role-play discussing the topic. Write key words but not full sentences. Plan to use lots of body language to go with the role-play.
- Do your role-play.

Self-Assessment

Yes No

I identify forms of body language.

☐ ☐

I discuss the meaning of different forms of body language.

☐ ☐

I write key words for a role-play.

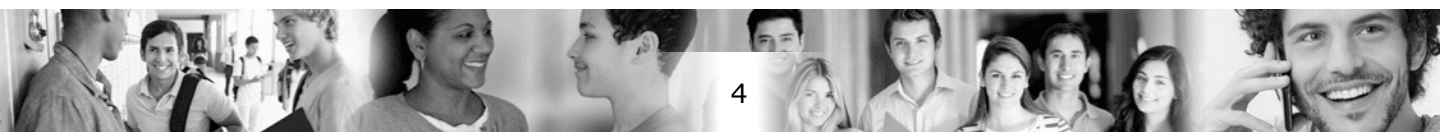

☐ ☐

I role-play a situation between two colleagues at work.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- to gauge (verb): to judge how people feel about something e.g. When you are making a presentation, you need to observe your audience to help you gauge their level of interest.
- intuitively (adverb): a way of understanding through feelings rather than through logic or fact e.g. Intuitively, people pick up on the small movements and gestures known as body language.
- reaction (noun): something that you feel or do because of something that has happened or been said e.g. Facial expressions can be extremely useful to determine audience reactions.
- subconscious (adjective): relating to the part of your mind that has thoughts and feelings you do not know about e.g. It is worth your while to note that an audience member who exhibits this body language may not be giving off either of these subconscious signals.
- indicator (noun): something that can be regarded as a sign of something else
e.g. A classic indicator of interest is leaning toward the presenter.
- defensive (adjective): behaving in a way that shows you think someone is criticizing you even if they are not e.g. Most people think that crossing your arms is a defensive signal.
- mode (noun): a way of doing something e.g. It might be that sitting with their arms crossed is their comfort mode.
- to shift around (verb): to move from one place or position to another Example: If a person keeps shifting around in their chair, it might not mean they are bored or restless.

Learning Points

Relative Clauses: Prepositions and Relative Clauses After Pronouns

Remember: Relative Clauses are clauses (sentences) that start with relative pronouns who, that, which, whose, where, and when.

There are rules about using prepositions in relative clauses and using relative clauses after pronouns.

Relative Clauses are used to clarify which person or thing we are talking about.

Examples:

This is the man who helped me during the project.

The dogs that love cats are special.

The beach was definitely the thing which I enjoyed most about my holiday.

I met a girl whose husband is a pilot.

This is the company where I worked for 20 years.

I remember my graduation party. It was the day when the earthquake happened.

As you can see, those relative pronouns provide extra or specific information about the people or things we are talking about.

When a preposition is needed in a relative clause, it can be placed before the relative pronoun or at the end of the clause.

For example:

Science is a subject which I always had trouble with.

Science is a subject with which I always had trouble. (This structure is generally more formal)

There are some fixed prepositional phrases you can use in non-defining relative clauses such as:

in which case

at which point

as a result of which the result of which was that

by which time

For example:

It was a massive scandal, as a result of which every single employee resigned.

Learning Points

Defining relative clauses usually come after these pronouns:

something, anything, nothing, everything, someone, anyone, many, all, those, some, little, much

For example:

Many who saw the movie were amazed.

Examples:

- People pick up on the small movements and gestures known as body language in which case, you need to be aware of the following:
- They all started to slouch in their seats, at which point I thought it was better to change the topic.
- They have made this presentation before, as a result of which they have had some experience talking about the topic.
- We have not been able to come to a conclusion, the result of which was that no progress has been made.

Body Language in the Workplace

Did you know that 95% of communication is non-verbal? This means that your body language has a great impact on the way people perceive you.

Having excellent non-verbal communication skills tells your audience (whether they be a group of people at a presentation, or an individual coworker) that you are confident, honest and motivated.

Here are a few things to keep in mind about your body language at work:

1. Posture - how you feel affects how you stand. Stand tall, with your shoulders back and head up.
2. Be in sync with others around you. Observe their body language and try to match it. That makes you appear interested and engaged.
3. Eye contact. Being able to maintain eye contact with someone communicates confidence, authority and attentiveness.
4. Show interest. Respond verbally and nonverbally to what others are saying.
5. Try not to fidget. Fidgeting is interpreted as a nervous habit and most people are unaware they do it.

